COLLEGIATE COMMENCEMENT

Wonderland Theatre was not large enough to accommodate the crowd who sought to attend the programme presented by the students of the Collegiate for Friday evening's entertainment and annual Commencement Exercises and many were turned away.

The stage was prettily decorated with red, white and blue bunting. On a table in the centre draped with the Union Jack, were placed the medals, cups and diplomas to be presented.

Mr. W. S. Herkston, chairman, opened the entertainment with a few words and stated that no encholrus would be given, as the programme was too lengthy to admit any.

The piano selections by Misses Madeline Stevens and Thelma Ham were beautifully rendered and received well deserved applause.

Four orations were given during the evening, Albert Hill keeping the audience in smiles while he gave "Cleopatra's Needle." Miss May Reid gave "The Life of Lady Byng," which was very much enjoyed by all. "Hard Living Stone, given by Miss Jessie Hitchins, carried many old students back to their old Collegiate days, when the above subject caused them considerable worry, when plugging to learn his work and drive. Clifford Lowry took the audience on an imaginary trip to the West Indies, describing the customs of those islands. "So was I," recited by Miss Mildred Milling and "O Them Oxen," by Miss Jean Paul, were well done. Each girl putting in the required emotion to bring out the substance of the story.

Miss Mary Daly's song, accompanied by Mrs. J. E. Madden, and Miss Hilda Daly's Scotch dance, delighted the audience, but no encores were allowed, so they could not be called back.

Miss Ruette Dalton gave something new in a Spanish dance and would have been encored back if it were not against the rule.

Mrs. Cameron Wilson also delighted the audience with her violin selection.

The presentations were made by Rev. A. H. Foster, Rev. Father O'Connor, Rev. A. J. Terrill, Rev. A. J. Wilson and Mr. Herrington, who each in their turn spoke of the splendid work of the school and the value of education to the young boys and girls of Canada.

WEDDING BELLS

MORSE—DALY.

On Wednesday afternoon at half past two o'clock, the marriage took place at St. Andrew's Church, of Florence Jean Marion, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. A. Daly, to John Douglas, only son of Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Morse, of Winnipeg. The Rev. A. J. Wilson officiated, and the wedding marches were beautifully played by Mrs. J. E. Madden. The bridal party entered the church, preceded by the ushers and the two little sisters of the bride, the Misses Hilda and Marjorie Daly, dainty little flower girls, in their Mary blue georgette frocks trimmed with valenciennne lace over pale pink crepe-de-chine, with sashes and hair bows of pink tulle, while they carried white baskets of fragrant pink roseburds. The bridesmaids were Miss Helen Daly, sister of the bride, and Miss Margaret Daly, cousin of the bride, who wore softly draped gowns of Mary blue Canton crepe with orchid lace sleeves, one sleeve of each gown flowing gracefully into a cascade train. With silver leaves in their hair, silver shoes and stockings, and armfuls of pink chrysanthemums they made a very charming picture.

On the arm of her father, the bride entered, looking very lovely in her gown of white Salome velvet, with graceful drapings caught at the hip with a white rose, and a court train lined with pale blue Canton crepe. Her fair hair was bound with orange blossoms, the tulle veil worn over the face and fastened in a high coronet at the back with a spray of the orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lillies of the valley.

Mr. Geo. Drewe, of Guelph, acted as best man and Mr. Morris Daly and Mr. Harton Walker, of Toronto, were ushers. The background of drooping ferns and mauve mums, brought out the delicate shades of pink, blue and mauve, while to the soft strains of the organ, the impressive service was performed and the solemn vows made. During the signing of the register, Miss Mary Daly, in a dress of cream Spanish lace over pink georgette crepe, with a corsage of sweetheart roses, and a band of silver leaves in her hair, sang "Love's Coronation," by Alysward, very sweetly, accompanied by Mrs. Madden.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mrs. Daly receiving in brown Salome velvet, with [illegible] old, a diamond pendant, [illegible] ers bouquet of [illegible] Mrs. D. O. [illegible] assisted by [illegible] Mrs. J. Oswald, were [illegible] ed.

Beautiful [illegible] also received with the bride, was handsomely gowned in black brocaded velved, with ermine wrap and black velvet hat, and carried a bird corsage.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Daly was charmingly decorated with huge chrysanthemums, shaded yellow and bronze ones in the reception and living rooms, and in the tea room where the bride's table was placed, the color scheme was in the bride's favorite colors of pale pink, mauve and blue. A large wedding bell of white flowers, with sprays of sweetheart roses, hung from the chandelier, directly over the wedding cake, which made a lovely centre piece, surrounded by bridal roses. The sweets were all in pink and mauve in silver baskets, and bows of white and pink ribbons and graceful, trailing smilax were profusely used.

Mr. and Mrs. Morse left at five o'clock on their wedding trip, the bride travelling in a brown embroidered dress, with smart hat and fur collarette. Among the guests from out of town were Mrs. McDougal, of Montreal; Mr. and Mrs. W. Morse, of Winnipeg; Miss Marjorie Campbell, Mr. Ross Cox, Mr. and Mrs. Harton Walker, Mrs. Wm. Fate and Mrs. Roy McKay, of Toronto, and Miss Nellie Milne, of Belleville.

BASKETBALL

A match was played in the Armouries on Wednesday evening, between Kingston Collegiate girls' basketball team, and Napanee Collegiate girls' team, resulting in a score of 19-16 in favor of N.C.I. The game was called at 7.15 and each side featured in the first period, N.C.I. winning the greater number of points, and the first period ended in N.C.I.'s favor by a score of 16-4. The last period was very slow on account of several fouls by each team. Kingston received free throws in the last period, which brought the score 19-4 at the finish. As the game was fast and keen, loud cheers were heard from the gallery which disheartened K.C.I. at times, but had an opposite effect on N.C.I.

After the game K.C.I. was entertained by their opponents and partook of a dainty lunch in Caton's restaurant, after which they spent an enjoyable evening.

The Napanee Collegiate senior and Junior teams played in Trenton on Saturday. The seniors played a very close game and were winners over their opponents by a margin of four points. Score N.C.I. 11. T.H.S., 7.

The Juniors were not so fortunate and lost to Trenton. Score, T.H.S., 38. N.C.I., 4.

The Seniors will play Belleville H.S., in the Napanee Armouries, on Thursday. This will be the senior championship game, so come along and cheer the girls to victory.

A BIG FIRE AT ODESSA

A fire which broke out in the village of Odessa at about one o'clock on Thursday morning, did damage to the extent of about [illegible] W. D. O. [illegible] owned by [illegible] occupied by [illegible] was completely [illegible] stroyed.

Had it not been for the fact that there was no wind blowing and the wonderful work of the people from the surrounding district, along with a detachment from the the Kingston fire brigade, it is very doubtful if much of the village would have been saved.

The people arrested was a frame structure covered with galvanized irons and owned by Toomey and Oswald.

D. O. Fink stated that his loss would be about fifteen thousand dollars, and he had about five thousand dollars insurance. Mr. Oswald figured he had lost at least ten thousand dollars, and he had considerable insurance.

When the fire was first noticed it had gained such a headway that it was almost impossible to do anything, and for that reason the village was called in time in preventing the blaze catching on the surrounding buildings.

Mr. Fink's stock were destroyed were located in the heart of the village, and are on the south side of the main street. The store occupied by Mr. Fink is directly opposite the building which was destroyed, caught fire, but by quick work of the fire fighters extinguished the blaze before any serious damage was done. When this building took fire the fire fighters got busy and were successful in saving all the furniture and personal effects belonging to Mrs. Burley.

A barn just east of the scene of the fire got ablaze but it was put out before any great damage was done. It was very fortunate that the creek, which runs through the village, was very close to the scene of the fire and for that reason the fire fighters did not have far to carry water.

Mr. Fink stated that when he arrived at the store and attempted to open the front door the blaze was so heavy that he was unable to do anything. His next thought was to go to the rear of his building and attempt to get out his large Reo truck, which he uses for hauling in the country. The fire had gained such a headway in this part of the building also that it was impossible for him to get the truck out. The truck was loaded with provisions and ready to start out on Thursday morning. The book in which he kept the accounts of all who buy from this vehicle was in the car, and is, of course, lost. Mr. Fink said he had about $3,000 on this book, and he has no other record. For that reason he will undoubtedly lose money.

The building was covered with galvanized iron and was one of the best in the village. On the second floor of the Ancient Order of United Workmen and the Canadian Order of Chosen Friends had lodge rooms. All the furniture and other articles, the property of the two lodges, fell the prey of the flames.

THE LIFEBOAT

By GEORGE R. SIMS.

(Reprinted by Request.)

Been out in the lifeboat? Ay, ay, sir, oft enough.
When it's rougher than this? Lor' bless you! this ain't what we call rough!
It's when there's a gale a-blowin' and the white cliffs seem to shake;
When the sea is a hell of waters, and the bravest holds his breath
As he hears the cry for the lifeboat—his summons maybe to death—
That's when we call it rough, sir; but, if we can get her afloat,
There's always enough brave fellows ready to man the boat.

You've heard of the Royal Helen, the ship as was wrecked last year?
Yon be the rock she struck on—the boat as went out be here:
The night as she struck was reckoned the worst as ever we had,
And this is a coast in winter where the weather is awful bad.
The beach here was strewed with wreckage, and to tell you the truth at first then
Was the only time as ever we'd a bother to get the men.
The single chaps was willin' and six on 'em volunteered,
But most on us here is married, and the wives that night was skeered.

Our women ain't chicken-hearted when it comes to savin' lives,
But death that night looked certain—and our wives be only wives;
Their lot ain't bright at the best, sir; but here when the man lies dead,
'Tain't only a husband missin', it's the children's daily bread:
So our women began to whimper and their fears so much to seek,
I only heard on it after, for that night I was kept away.
I was up at my cottage, yonder, where the wife ay nigh her end,
She'd been ailin' all the winter, and nothin' 'ud make her mend.

The doctor had given her up, sir, and I knelt by her side and prayed.
With my eyes as red as a baby's, that Death's hand might yet be stayed.
I heard the wild wind howlin', and I looked on the wasted form,
And the thought of the awful shipwreck as had come in the ragin' storm;
The wreck of my little homestead—the wreck of my dear old wife,
Who'd sailed with me for forty years, sir, o'er the troublous waves of life.
And I looked at the eyes so sunken, as had been my harbor lights,
To tell of the sweet home haven where I'd found such calm delights.

She knew she was [illegible] she knew I was nigh.
But she never spoke; [illegible] knew I returned must lie.
For we'd had one great big sorrow with Jack, our only son—He'd got into trouble in London, as lots o' the lads ha' done:
Then he'd bolted, his masters told us—he was allus what folk call wild.
From the day as I told his mother, her dear face never smiled.
We heard no more about him, we never knew where he went,
And his mother pined and sickened for the message he never sent.

I had my work to think of, but she had her grief to nurse,
So it eat away at her heartstrings, and her health grew worse and worse.
And the night as the Royal Helen went down on yonder sands,
I sat and watched her dyin', holdin' her wasted hands.
She moved in her doze a little then her eyes were opened wide,
And she seemed to be seekin' somethin' as she looked from side to side:
Then half to herself she whispered, "Where's Jack, to say good-bye?
It's hard not to see my darlin' and kiss him afore I die!"

I was stoopin' to kiss and soothe her, while the tears ran down my cheek,
And my lips were shaped to whisper the words I couldn't speak,
When the door of the room burst open, and my mates were there outside
With the news that the boat was launchin', "You're wanted!" their leader cried.
"You've never refused to go, John, You'll put these cowards right.
There's a dozen lives maybe, John, as lie in our hands to-night!"
'Twas old Ben Brown, the captain—he'd laugh at the women's doubt.
We'd always been first on the beach, sir, when the boat was goin' out.

I didn't move, but I pointed to the white face on the bed—
"I can't go, mate," I murmured; "in an hour she may be dead.
I cannot go and leave her to die in the night alone."
As I spoke Ben raised his lantern and the light on my wife was thrown;
And I saw her eyes fixed strangely with a pleading look on me.
With a trimblin' finger pointed through the door to the ragin' sea.
Then she seemed to me near, and whispered, "Go," and God's will be done!
For every lad on that ship, John, is some poor mother's son."

Her head is full of the boy, sir, she is thinkin', maybe, of some ship
For lack of a hand to help him his life might be cast away.
"Go, John," said the Lord watch o'er you! and spare me to see the night,
And bring you safe," she whispered, "out of the storm to-night."
Then I turned and kissed her softly, and tied to hide my tears,
And my mates stood aside when they saw me set up three hearty cheers.
But I rubbed my eyes wi' my knuckles, and turned to old Ben and said:
"I'll see her again, maybe, lad, when the sea gives up its dead."

We launched the boat in the tempest, though death was the goal in view,
And never a one but doubted if the craft could live it through.
But our boat she stood it bravely, and, weary and wet and weak
We drew in hail of the vessel we'd been the governments coin-cerned, and legislation to deal
But just as we came upon her she gave a fearful roll
And went down in the seethin' whirlpool with every livin' soul
We rowed for the spot and shouted, for all around was darkness—
But only the wild wind answered the cries from our plungin' barks.

I was strainin my eyes and watchin', when I thought I heard a cry,
And I saw past our bows a something on the crest of a wave dashed by:
I stretched out my hand to seize it, I dragged it aboard, and then
I stumbled and struck my forhud, and fell like a log on Ben.
I remember a hum of voices, and then I knowed no more
Till I oped my senses here, sir, in my home ashore.
My forhud was tightly bandaged, and on my little bed—
I'd slipped in the night and struck my forhud against the bed—
Lay my own brave lad, my sailor boy, my Jack, my pride and joy.

FOR TUESDAY ONLY

CENTS SQ. YD

This is considerably cheaper than this good quality can be sold. The buzzin' sound: But season's end is near, and we're clearing ahead, so we've doomed to hear 'em speak.
I knew as I read lain like that, sir, for many a long, long week
I guessed what the lads was hidin' for their poor old shipmate's sake.
I could see by their puzzled faces they'd got some news to break;
So I lifts my head from the pillow and I says to old Ben, "Look here!
I'm able to hear it now lad—tell me and never fear."

Not one on 'em ever answered, but presently Ben goes out,
And the others slinks away like, and I says, "What's this about?
Why can't they tell me plainly as for poor old wife is dead?"
Then I fell again on the pillows, and I hid my achin' head:
I lay like that for a minute, till I And I thought it must be a vision heerd a voice cry "John!"
as my weak eyes gazed upon For there by the bedside standin' up and well was my wife,
And who do you think was with her? Why Jack, as large as life.

It was him as I'd saved from drownin' the night as the lifeboat went
To the wreck of the Royal Helen; 'twas that as the vision meant
They'd brought us to shore in gether, my knelt by his mother's bed,
And the sudden joy had raised her like a miracle from the dead.
And mother and son together had nursed me back to life,
My old eyes woke from darkness to look on my son and wife.
Jack? He's our right hand now, sir, 'twas Providence pulled him through—
He's allus the first aboard her, when the lifeboat wants a crew.

NEW BAD LANDS.

Dante-esque Region Exists In the Canadian Wilds.

A new "bad lands" region exists in the Canadian wilds, reports a Canadian Government agent who has returned from Fort Norman on the Mackenzie river in far northern Canada. The agent went there to investigate the recent oil discoveries reported. In many places he found enormous quantities of burning coal and shale. The air is full of the smell of sulphur and burning coal. At night along the river great cliffs of sizzling molten clay may be seen.

This may sound Dante-esque, but its probability cannot be denied. It is well known that the fantastic and highly colored "bad lands" formations of South Dakota owe their origin and conditions to just such a happening. In fact, some of the beds of coal in that region are still burning. Similar phenomena have been known in other parts of the world.

Some say marvej that coal and oil are found so far north, even within the Arctic Circle, since coal, especially, is known to be derived from plant life which flourished in a tropical or mild climate. The coal beds of the Mackenzie river region, however, are several million years old, although comparatively recent as the geological age of the earth is now generally accepted. At the time they were formed, and also much more recently, the climatic conditions of the earth were very different from now. It is not only conceivable, but certain, that tropical conditions in the relatively recent geologic past have existed at both the North and South polar regions.

How the fire started can only be surmised. It may have been from lightning or most likely from spontaneous combustion such as takes place in coal storage bins quite frequently. This little local "hell on earth probably has been burning for countless thousands of years and it will continue until burned out or until the air can no longer reach the burning material to supply the necessary oxygen for combustion.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

Progress has been made by the government during the week in settling two problems which have given more or less trouble during past years. As the result of conferences between all interested parties the basis of an agreement has been reached for settlement of the difficult problem of regulating the levels of the Lake of the Woods and other waters which are both international and interprovincial in their importance. The agreements reached will form the basis of a treaty to be signed between Canada and United States governments as to the Lake of the Woods levels, and the question of the upper waters will be referred to the International Joint Commission for a decision.

The matter of the water levels was taken up some time ago, and during the visit of the Prime Minister to Washington last summer, there were further negotiations. At that time, Secretary Hughes, on behalf of Minnesota, which has an interest in the water levels, asked Rt. Hon. Mr. King to allow the governor of that state an opportunity to present certain data which he considered would be sufficient to justify the enlarging of the Lake of the Woods treaty to take in also the upper lakes. Governor Preus, of Minnesota, was therefore invited to attend last week's conference with some of his officials, and the provinces of Manitoba and Ontario, as well as the cities and power interests concerned, were also present.

Governor Preus' data was found to be valuable, but still not sufficient to require enlargement of the Lake of the Woods treaty. The parties to the conference, however, reached an agreement as to the proposals of that treaty and also as to submission of the other matters to the commission.

The outcome of the conference, it is said, was most satisfactory. The situation has long been a subject of correspondence between the governments concerned, and legislation to deal with it, it will be remembered, has been before Parliament on several occasions. Shortly after the opening of the coming session, it is expected, the Prime Minister will make a full statement to the House on the negotiations which have been conducted during the past week, and their outcome, and will also introduce whatever legislation may be necessary to implement the agreements.

In the matter of natural resources, which has been a thorny question between the federal government and the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, for many years, considerable progress was also made at a conference held during the week. The government of Manitoba failed to reach any basis of agreement, beyond expressing principles with the Dominion authorities, but the other government representatives were able to return home with tentative proposals in their pockets to place the Dominion [illegible] be held responsible, on a fiduciary basis, for all lands and resources alienated since 1870. The federal government on the other hand stands by its agreement with former Premier Norris to place Manitoba on a basis of equality with the other provinces in the matter of resources. In the case of Manitoba, little progress was made in the negotiations beyond placing the conferences in a better position towards one another, and leaving the door open for further meetings whenever the province is ready.

The discussions in the future, however, are to be conducted between the dominion government and each of the provinces separately, since it was admitted by the provinces themselves that their interests were so different in many regards that there was doubt as to them being able to reach any common basis of agreement. With the negotiations proceeding on this basis in the future, it is expected that the reaching of a settlement will be a much easier matter than when the government tried to negotiate with all three together.

A significant and timely article under the signature of Lt. Col. John Bayne Maclean, appears in the current issue of Maclean's magazine, in which, after reviewing some of the events leading up to the recent Near East crisis and Canada's part in it, the writer asks: "Did Canada stop the Near East war?"

Col. Maclean, whose article indicates a close study of international politics during recent years reviews the situation and points out that "We Canadians have spent one third of our resources in the war." He then says:

"Some men, not Canadians, who have unusually good resources of world wide information, whose judgment is generally sound and whose views are held in high esteem, are positive that the premier demanded by the Lloyd George-Churchill demands, preceded as they were by propaganda and scheming for Canadian participation, of the British Empire would undoubtedly have been at war with Turkey, Russia and perhaps India, Afghanistan, Persia and God knows who else or what the end would have been. We are now on bad terms with all of them.

"The same men say further that the Imperial military leaders, knowing the facts, knowing there were no excuse or necessity for a war, knowing the fearful developments from such a war, and finally, knowing the motives inspiring such a war, had to fight with their backs to the wall to save the empire."

Again Col. Maclean writes: "It is an interesting fact that these propogandists and their agents in Canada should have known in advance the exact terms of the "strictly secret and confidential" message to the Canadian Government—known it at least twenty-four hours before the Canadian prime minister had any hint of the shock of a new war that was awaiting this country—an emergency on the surface only, for the plans had been made and the zero hour for setting it off had been fixed long ago.

A full-size, full-weight, solid bar of good soap is "SURPRISE." Best for any and all household use.

"Subsequent developments—and the Canadians are getting only part of the exposures—show clearly that in refusing to back Lloyd George the Canadian Government voiced exactly the sentiment of the masses in the Mother Country.

The bye-election fights are beginning to really warm up. The four seats which previously returned Liberals have indicated almost a certainty of repeating the desired effect, and Lanark, which is the outstanding contest of the five looks hopeful.

All of the conservative "big-guns" are being trained on the constituency in an effort to avert what looks like almost certain defeat for their candidate and the Liberal nominee, David Findlay, and his supporters are putting up a hard fight with penty of assistance from ministers and other prominent Liberal speakers. It is expected that the Prime Minister will spend several days in the riding towards the end of the month and will add his arguments to those of the other Liberal speakers in favor of Mr. Findlay, who is a strong candidate and who will make a valuable member of parliament.

Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Militia and Defence, was in the riding last week, and Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior, will be there during the next few days. Hon. Mr. Graham in a masterly speech dealt with the affairs both at home and abroad and pointed out that the need of Canada to-day was a good business administration. This the Dominion was being given by the King government, with the result that our position among the countries of the world was being improved daily. Dealing with railway matters, Mr. Graham [illegible] the government had provided for the amalgamation of the Canadian National System which was composed of men who had been successful in their own lines of business, and who had the character and integrity necessary to assure that they would give their very best efforts in administering this great public utility. Sir Henry Thornton has been one of the outstanding railway men in England during the war and he would be given an absolutely free hand in his endeavors to make Canada's railway system a great national asset.

Sir Henry will be in Canada by December 1st, and will immediately take control and begin to familiarize himself with the conditions throughout the system which he will have to face.

Smoking.

Why do people like to smoke tobacco? As a matter of fact, comparatively few people—and those the light smokers—really do "like to smoke." The bulk of men simply dislike not smoking, which is rather different.

In other words, most of us smoke purely through habit.

We bow to a fashion, or what the doctor calls a "herd instinct" (so many others smoke, you see); and we also continue the almost universal instinct to suck something, as a sort of "time-killer," generally more pleasant than absolute idleness.

The nicotine contained in tobacco, though acting as a slight sedative and digestive, converts itself in our body into an anti-nicotine, which sets up a restless irritation which can only be calmed by—more nicotine.

Radio on Busses.

Equipping motor busses with radio apparatus is a departure inaugurated by a transit company operating some eighty-five of these vehicles on the Pacific coast. This innovation is the result of the keen rivalry of the bus concerns to obtain for their respective lines the patronage of the thousands of tourists who annually visit the Pacific coast. That the venture is practical has been fully demonstrated by extensive experiments. Possessing only a two-step radio [illegible] receiving outfit, the experimenters could hear concerts at a distance of fifteen miles from the broadcasting station, while dropping [illegible] necessity of employing a low antenna.—Popular Mechanics.

SASKATCHEWAN WOMAN RECOVERS

Found Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Melaval, Saskatchewan.—"I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised for women's troubles and when a friend recommended it to me I tried it and it has done me so much good in the two years in which I have been taking it that I find I am a different woman since then. I recommend your Vegetable Compound as much as I can and you may use my letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. WM. J. THOMAS, Melaval, Saskatchewan.

These letters recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound ought to convince women of the great worth of this medicine in the treatment of ailments to which they are often subject.

Mrs. Thomas writes that she is a different woman now. If you are suffering from troubles women often have, or feel all run down, without any ambition or energy for your regular work, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It is a natural restorative and should help you as it has Mrs. Thomas and many, many other women.

This medicine has been helping sick women nearly fifty years—surely a long record of service.

Getting Ready.

THOSE who have put in their winter supply of coal will be glad to know that the Kingston market closed on the last five weeks with large quantities of salmon and white fish for sale, and that the stocks are rapidly being depleted as the fish, through spawning, are returning to the deeper water of the lake. Consequently they are asking much higher prices for what they catch.

Hockey Club Organized.

On Thursday evening a meeting was held in the Campbell House for the purpose of organizing a hockey club for the season. The new club will be known as the "Crescent" A.A. and will be worthy of general support. Those present pledged themselves to do their best to have an efficient team. The officers elected are as follows:

Hon. Pres.—W. A. Daly.
Pres.—R. R. White.
Vice-Pres.—Harold Anderson.
Sec.-Treas.—L. H. Douglas.
Coach—Jack Adams.
Manager—H. L. Babcock.

The next meeting will be held on Tuesday evening, Dec. 5th, in the Council Chamber.

A Bear Story.

Two hunters from Selby went into the north country on a deer hunt. On arriving at their camping ground the party started out to look for deer. One of the party was left at a likely spot near a lake and the other gentlemen went around the lake to stir up some deer. Everything was quiet and still suddenly a large black bear tried to scrape acquaintance with the watcher and there was something doing right away. Though the gentleman had a loaded gun in his hand he was too excited to use it, and straightway beat it for his companion. After a long chase he caught him and on returning to the spot where he hear had appeared they found Mr. Bear busily eating of them. The bear was shot and his beautiful hide will grace the floor of one of the hunters.

"Don't Worry About Me"

Tom's Assuring Message

On a little farm away up north Tom lived with his parents and one brother. His father, well up in years, found himself unable to continue the hard work of farming, so Tom took up the burden. The income was not large, and the lad signed up with a lumber gang working nearby—sawing logs, stripping bark and driving the teams. Altogether these two jobs, farmer and lumberman, kept his day so well filled that he had time for little more than sleep. Nature rebelling at this heavy burden—consumption claimed another victim.

After trying various ways to overcome his physical weakness, he went to the Muskoka Hospital. His parents are anxious about him, for the other son to see him often, for they are old and feeble and journeying is a hazardous undertaking to them. Tom's own troubles are now so real to him that he forgets others. He asks for those about him, lives for little bits of news about his home, and never fails to send this message back, "Don't worry about me. The people here sure do treat you white."

A wonderful work is being done by the National Sanitarium Association. The death rate from tuberculosis in Ontario has been reduced by more than one-half during the last twenty years. It needs your help to make its efforts still more effective.

Contributions may be sent to Hon. W. A. Charlton, 223 College Street, Toronto.

House Burned at Empey Hill.

About seven o'clock on Saturday morning the home of Mr. Guy Bradley, at Empey Hill, was completely destroyed by fire, supposed to have been caused by a defective chimney. The contents of the house were saved by neighboring farmers. A milking machine fell a victim to the flames. We understand the loss is well covered by insurance. Mr. Bradley was in Toronto attending the cattle show.

Phelps Power and Light

This is the dull season of the year—short cloudy days, and long dark nights.

The chores must be done with the lantern which is most inadequate and dangerous. Only last week a large barn and contents were burned, caused by a pigeon flying against a lantern, knocking it down.

Not so when buildings are lighted with Phelps light.

Then Phelps power will saw your wood, grind your grain, pump your water, wash your clothes, and numerous other work about the farm 365 days a year, simply by touching a button.

We would be glad to demonstrate, at any time, the superiority of Phelps over other systems on the market.

Republican Priest Deported.

DUBLIN, Nov. 27.—Father Dominick, who was the spiritual adviser of Terence MacSwiney, Lord Mayor of Cork, when he died on hunger-strike, is a passenger on board the steamship Adriatic bound from Queenstown for New York. The destination of Father Dominick is Dominican House, in Oreson, where he has been ordered by his ecclesiastical superiors.

The Adriatic also has as a passenger, Mrs. MacCurtain, widow of the Lord Mayor of Cork, and her sister, Miss Walsh, both prominent Republicans. Father Dominick refused to give an interview prior to his departure, but Miss Walsh said that everybody knew the priest was being expelled from Ireland because of his political opinions.

Prisoners Taken to Dublin.

DUBLIN, Nov. 27.—Prisoners in Limerick are being taken by motorlorry to Dublin because of special complaints by the local authorities of overcrowding of the prisons. Transport by sea is considered safest in view of the dislocation of railway and road traffic.

RUGBY AT THE N.C.I.

Picton Collegiate rugby team visited Napanee on Saturday to play the N.C.I. team. The game was held up until 4 p.m., by the late arrivals of Picton team and many of the spectators went home thinking the Picton team were not coming. The few who stayed witnessed a good game and saw the Napanee boys win by a score of 15-0.

Napanee kicked to Church, of Picton, who was downed on their 35-yard line. Then from this first down Picton made it interesting for the locals. They gained yards from the start and almost showing N.C.I. up, but N.C.I., after losing 15 yards for punting and making a few fumbles, bucked up just before the whistle blew and started to throw themselves into the game. Stewart tackled hard and never missed his man. By a nice combination play "Torch" Daly got through for a touch. N.C.I., 5. P.H.S., 0.

The second quarter Picton started with a kick to Perry, who returned. Scott, of Picton, got the ball, but Stewart brought him down. Picton played the N.C.I. off side by fake signals and both times N.C.I. lost 10 yards. Picton also lost 10 yards by an off-side play. N.C.I. had the ball in the danger zone all the time, forcing Picton to kick to save the line three times. Daly, Judson, Cowle and Stewart tackled like demons this period and Scott and Perry returned all kicks.

It was getting dusk when the third period started. Picton made a short kick and Stewart got it, running it down for yards. Napanee then bucked hard, advancing the play from one end of the field to the Picton line. Smith was used a lot from the line, but on the fourth down was the bucking of the back line, Scott going through with the aid of Perry and Daly. Bill Daly called for a buck from the line, the line mass fumbled the ball, but Bill was on it like a tiger and went through for 7 yards. Smith again gained yards. For running interference Napanee lost the ball. Picton again lost it to Napanee. Several end runs were made by Cowle and Stewart and Wheeler broke through for a touch. Score: N. C. I., 10, Picton, 0.

In the fourth period Picton got the ball from Napanee interference, but lost it by a fumble, and Napanee got busy and got near Picton's good line by a series of bucks. Stewart got away for an end run and gained a touch. Picton kicked off again and Napanee returned, when the whistle blew. Score, N.C.I., 15. Picton, 0.

Stewart was the N.C.I. star player and Church the P.H.S. star. The teams:

Picton—Rorabeck, flying wing; Church, half; Hudson, half; Rorke, quarter; Young, snap; Culver, inside; McPherson, inside; Gordon, middle; Thompson middle; Yanover, outside; Beamish, outside; Zufelt, McLean, sub.

Napanee—G. Daly, flying wing; Perry, half; Stewart, half; T. Daly, quarter; Swanwinson, snap; Garrett, Smith, middle; Scott, middle; Cowle, outside; Vandelinde, outside; Wheeler, Walters, Killorin, subs.

ACCUSED OF MURDER.

Pelham Farmer Faces Serious Charge Following Quarrel.

WELLAND, Ont., Nov. 27.—That Dwight Diltz came to his death as the result of blows inflicted by Charles Beckett, was the verdict brought in Saturday by the coroner's jury investigating the death of the former, a farmer of Pelham Center.

A provincial constable on the stand testified that Beckett confessed to him that there had been a "bit of a scuffle," and amplified this by admission that he might have used the blood-stained piece of wood and whiffletree found at the scene of the crime. He gave as the cause of the trouble Diltz' reply to him (Beckett) when he told him that he had been swindled by certain men. Diltz said: "You were just as much to blame as the other fellows." "Then," said Beckett, "I struck him."

Beckett, he said, had admitted washing his sweater, overcoat and socks to remove the bloodstains, in a brook, and asked the constable to take him out and kill him as he was tired of life.

The coroner refused to allow evidence as to Beckett's mental condition.

Counsel for Beckett applied to the Attorney-General, to have Beckett's sanity tested.

FREE DISTRIBUTION OF GRAIN

A free distribution of superior sorts of grain will be made during the coming winter to Canadian farmers by the Cereal Division of the Experimental Farms Branch, Ottawa. The samples will consist of spring wheat (about 5 lbs.), white oats, (about 4 lbs.) barley, (about 5 lbs.) field peas, not (about 5 lbs.) field garden peas; (about 2 lbs.) flax for seed beans, (about 2 lbs.) and flax for fibre (about 2 lbs.).

The Cereal Division of the Experimental Farms Branch has improved many of the old varieties of grain and introduced many new varieties. The best of them have been multiplied and propagated under direct supervision of responsible officers on the Experimental Farms both east and west. This seed will form the bulk stock from which the various samples will be taken. The seed is therefore the purest and best that is obtainable. Owing to the more recent introductions, there is only a limited supply, so it would be advisable to apply as soon as possible for these.

Application must be made on a printed form which will be supplied by the Cereal Division, Experimental Farm, Ottawa. (No postage is required on letters so addressed.) No application forms will be filled after Feb. 15th, 1923. Farmers are advised to send at once for forms in order not to be disappointed, as in some cases the stock is limited. The allotment of samples will be made in order of application. Only one sample will be sent to a farm.

DESERONTO.

Mr. A. W. Hugman, of Montreal, has completed negotiations to take over the Beacon match factory and made it known to the Town Council that if the Council would guarantee bonds of the factory to the amount of $6,000 and grant a fixed tax assessment all things would be completed to start up the factory for business at once. After a discussion by the Council the proposition was turned down until a difference of opinion as to whether the Council could legally grant the request. In the matter of guaranteeing bonds of the General Manufacturing Company to the amount of $25,000 in their proposal to move the factory now operating in Toronto and consolidate it with the factory in Deseronto, there is a general spirit of approval existing in the Council and among the citizens, but as yet, in accordance with representations made by the Mayor there is nothing before the Council in a formal way for consideration, but if there was the Council would very likely give the proposition its approval as far as the law and its power would permit.

The weekly euchre party and dance at Parish Hall on Tuesday evening last was a splendid success. In Magistrate Bradford's court the case against Charles W. Bailey, who is charged with an assault and doing grievous harm to his mother-in-law, Mrs. Susan Hill, was adjourned on the application of the Crown Attorney, with the consent of the prisoner's counsel, to December 18th. The accused was admitted to bail to the sum of $500, which was given by satisfactory sureties in court, and he was let go till the time of the trial. In the case of Gordon Green, wherein the boy was charged with theft there was not sufficient proof to sustain the charge and he was let go by the magistrate.

The STRANGE CASE of CAVENDISH

By RANDALL PARRISH

AUTHOR OF "THE DEVIL'S OWN" "MY LADY OF THE NORTH" ETC.

COPYRIGHT BY RANDALL PARRISH

"Maybe 'tain't that exactly, but I've been doin' a powerful lot o' thinkin' since you was asleep, Jim, an' I reckon we might best these fellers with a fair show o' luck. This is how I figure it out. Thar won't be no attack; that's a cinch. Lacy knows we can shoot, an' he also knows we've marooned 'em without food. The easiest thing is ter starve us out."

"But there are good men in this camp, law-abiding men," interrupted the miner. "Won't they take a hand?"

"Maybe they might if I was free ter get 'em together; but I ain't. Most o' 'em are out in the mines, anyway; they don't know which party is right in this rumpus, an' they ain't got no leader. Lacy runs the town, an' he's got a big gang o' toughs behind him. There ain't nobody wants to buck up against his game. Of course the boys might get mad after a while, but I reckon we'd be starved plumb ter death long afore that happened. An that ain't the worst uv it, Jim—the sheriff is Lacy's man. I wouldn't never dare turn you over ter him—not by a jugful."

"Then we are blocked at every turn."

"We sure are, unless we can dig out ourselves," gravely. "My notion is ter get a fair start, drift out into the shore, whar we'll leave no trail, an' then hit for over the line."

"On foot?"

"I—I, no! I ain't no such walker as all that. Come over yere; keep yer head down; now look out between these two rocks. Do yer see them cow-ponies hitched fer the rack alongside o' the Red Dog? Well, they've been thar fer a matter o' three hours, I reckon, an' their riders ain't liable ter leave as long as that's any excitement in town. They're XI, now, and mostly drunk by this time. It's my aim ter get a leg over one o' them animals. Here's my scheme, an' I reckon it'll work. Naturally Lacy will think we'll try ter get away over a break fer it in the dark. He'll have both them banks guarded, an' their fellers will have orders ter shoot. He'd rather have us dead than alive. But, ter my notion, he won't expect us ter try any strategy before midnight. Anyhow, that's how I'd figure if I was in his place. But my idea is ter pull one off on him, an' start the minute it gets dark enough so them lads can't see what's goin' on out yere."

"We'll fight our way through?"

"Not a fight, my son; we'll make it so softly that not a son-of-a-gun will ever know how it happened. When they wake up we'll be twenty miles out in the desert, an' still a-goin'. There's a big log clinging ter the upper end o' th' rock. I saw it when I first come over; an' 'bout an hour ago I crept back through that gully an' took a good look. A shove will send it floatin'. An' with a good pair o' legs to steer with, thar ain't nothin' to stop it this side the curve, an' I don't calculate any o' the rifle brigade will be down as far as that. It sounds blame good ter me. How's what d'ye say?"

Westcott's hand went out, and the fingers of the two men clasped silently. There was no need for more speech; they understood each other.

The night closed down swiftly, as it does in the West, the purple of the hills becoming black as though by some magic. There was a heavy cloud hanging in the Western sky, constantly sweeping higher in pledge of a dark night. The banks of the stream became obscured, and finally vanished altogether; while the water ceased to glimmer and turned to an inky blackness. Lights twinkled in the distant shacks, and the front of the Red Dog burst into illumination. Brennan chuckled, and pointed his finger at the glare.

"Lacy ain't forgettin' the profit in all this," he whispered hoarsely. "The boys are goin' fer be dry, an' he'll sell 'em all they want—wouldn't mind if I had some myself. Is it dark enough, mate?"

"The sooner the better!"

"That's my ticket. Come on then, but don't make a sound; them lads are more liable ter hear than they are ter see us. Let me go first."

The log was at the other end of the little island, but there was a considerable rift in the rock surface, not deep, but of sufficient width to permit the passage of a body. The jagged stone made the way rough in the dark, and Westcott found himself at the upper extremity, gashed and bruised by the contact.

Brennan lowered himself into the water, assisted in the downward climb by some low, tough bushes whose tendrils clung tenaciously to the smooth rock. Westcott followed silently, and found footing in about three feet of water, where it swirled around the base of the island. Brennan put his lips close to his companion's ear.

"Got yer cartridges tied up? That's all right; hand 'em over. You hang on to the outside, an' I'll push off. If yer have ter paddle ter keep in the current, don't let yer hands er feet come ter the surface—understand?"

"Certainly."

"All right then; are you all set? Holy smoke, this is going ter be some yacht ride."

The log did not even grate as it loosened its slight hold on the rock, and began the voyage down-stream. The current was swift enough to bear it and its burden free from the island although it moved slowly and noise lessly on its way. The two men deeply submerged on either side, with heads held rigid against the wet bark, were indistinguishable. Out from the deep er shadow, Brennan gently controlled the unwieldy affair, and keeping it as nearly as possible to the center, by the noiseless movement of a hand under water. No alarm greeted its progress, and at last, confident that they were already safely below the extent of the guard line, the two men, clinging to the wet sides, ventured to kick out quietly, and thus hasten its progress. It came ashore at the extreme end of the curve, and, after a moment of intent listening, the voyagers crept up the sand, and in whispers discussed the next effort of their escape. The bulky log, unstrapped from the rock, [illegible] ended with grips, Cateras' thin lips [illegible] hatefully polite,

They Clambered Cautiously Up the Low Bank.

"Go ahead with the light, Silva; not too fast, my man; the room beyond the senor's. Now, Meredes, release the girl.

"Ah, so you can stand alone, senorita; that is well. Step in here, ahead of me, and follow the lantern—there is nothing to fear."

She hesitated, and the smile on the Mexican's lips changed into a cruel grin.

"Shall I make you again?"

"No, senor."

"Then you will do as I bid."

"Yes, senor; I cannot resist."

The passage was clean and dry, and seemed to lead directly back into the cliff. The faint light revealed the side walls and low roof, and the girl, again partially mistress of herself, recognized the nature of the rock to be limestone.

Her view was limited to the slight radius illumined by the lantern, and even within that small area, her own shadow, and those of the three men, helped render everything indistinct. They had turned a sharp corner, and advanced a few feet beyond when the man with the lantern stopped suddenly, and, holding it up to reveal the light stream full on the exposed wall to the right. Another of these odd slits in the rock was visible here, and the girl was able to perceive more clearly its nature —beyond question it was an artificial opening, leading in a space on the farther side of the wall. Cateras pushed past the girl, his body interfering with her view, and bent down, fumbling along the rock surface.

"Hold the light closer," he commanded. "Aye, that's it. The same trick to find the thing— Ah! now I have it."

It seemed like a bit of wood, so resembling the color of the rock as to be practically imperceptible to the eye in that dim light. The piece of wood which slid back to reveal a heavy iron bolt, shot firmly into the stone. This the Mexican forced back and an opening yawned in the side wall, the rays of the lantern revealing the interior of a black cave. Cateras straightened up.

"Bring the woman," he commanded shortly, "and you, Meredes, see first to the light."

Silva thrust her forward, his grip no light one, while the other struck a match and applied it to the wick of a lamp occupying a bracket beside the doorway. As this caught the full interior was revealed beneath the sickly glow, a cell-like place, although of a fair size, unfurnished except for a rude bench, and one three-legged stool, the floor of stone, and the sides and roof apparently of the same solid structure. It was gloomy, bare, horrible in its dreariness—a veritable grave. The girl covered her face with her hands, appalled at the sight, unnerved at the thought of being left alone in such a place. Cateras saw the movement, and laughed, gazing about carelessly.

"Some boudoir, senorita," he said meaningly. "Well, we will see what can be done for you later. Perhaps a few hours in such a hole may work a miracle. When I come again you will be glad to see even me. I'll leave you to think it over; then I'll come back for an answer. Until then, senorita, adios."

The fellow lifted his hat, and stepped back into the passage, his manner insolent. His companion, Meredes, contempt in his eyes, but in truth hopeless and [illegible] Silva closed the door silently, [illegible] ears even [illegible] click of

CHAPTER XI.

The Cave in the Cliff.

Dazed, helpless, yet continuing to struggle futilely, Stella realized little except giving a glance at the hated faces of her captors. What occurred was not clear to her mind; but suddenly what appeared to be an open fireplace seemed to swing aside, leaving revealed a great black opening in the rock. To the lieutenant's snarl of command, one of the men released his grip of her arm, and the lantern which he took from a nearby shelf. The dim flicker of light penetrated a few feet into the dark hole, only serving to render the opening more grim and sinister. The girl shrank back, but the fellow still holding her tightened his grip. Cateras' thin lips [illegible]

"Go ahead with the light, Silva; not too fast, my man; the room beyond the senor's. Now, Meredes, release the girl.

"Ah, so you can stand alone, senorita; that is well. Step in here, ahead of me, and follow the lantern—there is nothing to fear."

She hesitated, and the smile on the Mexican's lips changed into a cruel grin.

"Shall I make you again?"

"No, senor."

"Then you will do as I bid."

"Yes, senor; I cannot resist."

The passage was clean and dry, and seemed to lead directly back into the cliff. The faint light revealed the side walls and low roof, and the girl, again partially mistress of herself, recognized the nature of the rock to be limestone.

Her view was limited to the slight radius illumined by the lantern, and even within that small area, her own shadow, and those of the three men, helped render everything indistinct. They had turned a sharp corner, and advanced a few feet beyond when the man with the lantern stopped suddenly, and, holding it up to reveal the light stream full on the exposed wall to the right. Another of these odd slits in the rock was visible here, and the girl was able to perceive more clearly its nature —beyond question it was an artificial opening, leading in a space on the farther side of the wall. Cateras pushed past the girl, his body interfering with her view, and bent down, fumbling along the rock surface.

"Hold the light closer," he commanded. "Aye, that's it. The same trick to find the thing— Ah! now I have it."

It seemed like a bit of wood, so resembling the color of the rock as to be practically imperceptible to the eye in that dim light. The piece of wood which slid back to reveal a heavy iron bolt, shot firmly into the stone. This the Mexican forced back and an opening yawned in the side wall, the rays of the lantern revealing the interior of a black cave. Cateras straightened up.

"Bring the woman," he commanded shortly, "and you, Meredes, see first to the light."

Silva thrust her forward, his grip no light one, while the other struck a match and applied it to the wick of a lamp occupying a bracket beside the doorway. As this caught the full interior was revealed beneath the sickly glow, a cell-like place, although of a fair size, unfurnished except for a rude bench, and one three-legged stool, the floor of stone, and the sides and roof apparently of the same solid structure. It was gloomy, bare, horrible in its dreariness—a veritable grave. The girl covered her face with her hands, appalled at the sight, unnerved at the thought of being left alone in such a place. Cateras saw the movement, and laughed, gazing about carelessly.

"Some boudoir, senorita," he said meaningly. "Well, we will see what can be done for you later. Perhaps a few hours in such a hole may work a miracle. When I come again you will be glad to see even me. I'll leave you to think it over; then I'll come back for an answer. Until then, senorita, adios."

The fellow lifted his hat, and stepped back into the passage, his manner insolent. His companion, Meredes, contempt in his eyes, but in truth hopeless and [illegible] Silva closed the door silently, [illegible] ears even [illegible] click of

No sound of retreating footsteps reached her through the thick wall. The stillness of her prison seemed to strike her like a blow. For a moment she stood staring at the bare wall, her lips parted, her limbs trembling from the reaction of excitement; then she stepped forward, and felt along the smooth surface of rock.

The door fitted so closely she could not even determine its exact outlines. Baffled, her glance wandered about the cell, seeking vainly for any sign of weakness, and then, giving way utterly to her despair, the girl flung herself on the bench, covering her face as she cut those terrible surroundings. What should she do? What could she do? What possibility of more say her own endeavors? From what source could she expect any outside help?

After those first moments of complete despair, there came greater calmness, in which her mind began to grapple with the situation. These outlaws would never dare to take her life. There was no occasion for them to resort to so desperate a deed. And why should Lacy desire to take her life? Most assuredly he did not, or the act would have been already accomplished. The very fact of her having been transported such a distance was sufficient evidence of his purpose. The conspirators merely suspected her mission in Haskell; they were afraid she knew more of their plans than she really did. The telegram, stolen by Miss La Rue, had convinced the leaders that she might prove dangerous if left at large, and they determined to hold her helpless until their scheme had been worked out and they were safely beyond pursuit. That was undoubtedly the object of her capture. Lacy had no knowledge that Mendez's band was at the rendezvous; he supposed them to be on a cattle raid to the south, with only a man or two of his own left as guard over Cavendish.

Cavendish! Her mind grasped clearly now the fact that the man was not dead. It had not been his body found in the Waldron apartments, but that of some other man substituted for purposes of crime. Cavendish himself had been lured westward, waylaid in some manner and made prisoner, as she and Westcott had suspected.

Through the co-operation of Lacy he had been brought to this desert den, where he could be held indefinitely, with no chance of discovery—killed if necessary. She had heard of such places as this, read of them, yet never before had she realized the possibility of their real existence. It all seemed more like a delirium of fever than an actual fact. She rubbed her eyes, gazing about on the rock walls, scarcely sure she was actually awake. Why, one might ride across the desert, and pass by within a hundred yards of its rim, and never even be aware of the existence of this sunken valley. Yet these men must have made use of it for years, as a place to hide stolen cattle, and into which to retreat whenever pursuit became dangerous.

Those huts without were not newly built, and this underground cavern had been enlarged and changed by no small labor. What deeds of violence must have happened here; what scenes of unbridled debauchery this desert rendezvous must have witnessed. She shuddered at the thought, comprehending that these cells had never been chiselled without a purpose, and that she was utterly helpless in the hands of a band of thieves and cutthroats, to whom murder meant little enough, if it only served their ends. Mendez, no doubt, was brute and monster, yet it was Juan Cateras whom she really feared—he was cruel, slimy, seeking to hide his hatefulness behind that hideous smile; and he had already chosen her for his victim. Who would save her—Mendez? Lacy? She did not know; and somehow neither of these was the name which arose to her lips, almost in the form of prayer; the name she whispered with a faint throb of hope in its utterance—Jim Westcott.

The big miner was all she had to rely upon; he had been in her mind all through the long ride; he arose before her again now, and she welcomed the memory with a conscious throb of expectation. Those people back there could not conceal for long the absence from his ranch. He lived he would surely seek her again.

Her womanly instinct had read the message in the man's eyes; she was of interest to him, he cared; it was no mere ordinary friendliness which would bring him back; not even was their mutual connection with the case of Frederick Cavendish. Her eyes brightened, and a flush of color crept into her cheeks. She believed in him, in his courage—he had appealed to her as a man.

Suddenly she seemed to realize the yearning of her own heart, her utter faith in him. He would come, he must come; even now he might have discovered [illegible] disappearance, [illegible] pockets of [illegible] would never believe [illegible] they might tell —that she had departed without a word, without a message—he would find out the truth somehow; he was not the kind to lie down, to avoid danger when it confronted duty—and, besides, he cared. She knew this, comprehended without question; there had been no word spoken, yet she knew.

Suddenly the girl's slender body grew taut, and her thin, white, delicate hands clutched the granite wall back of her, and into her gray eyes crept the light of terror, a terror that was more than fear. She heard a man's low clutching fear that her varied experiences in the city had never brought her, an insidious, terrible fright for her bodily safety. Her delicate ears, strained under their spun-brown coronet, caught there no room for doubt of it; she heard footsteps in the passage way, Juan Cateras with his leering, lustful smile was coming back.

The uncertainty was of scarcely an instant. The key turned in the lock and the door opened. Cateras, smiling, stepped within, calmly closed the door behind him, and then turned to greet the lady. She met his bow with eyes of firm resolve, though her heart beat [illegible]

"Why do you come, senor?" she asked so quietly that the man in surprise halted his step forward.

"To keep my word," and his white teeth gleamed in an effort at politeness. "I am always truthful with your sex; and I told you I would return shortly."

"Yet why?" she insisted, anxious only to keep him away as long as possible, and yet cognizant his interest. "If I am prisoner how can I be not your prisoner. Do you come, then, to serve me?"

"Can you doubt that, senorita?" still endeavoring to retain the mask he had assumed, "though the circumstances make me defy the law—a mere love of adventure, no more—is no reason why I should be devoid of heart and sympathy." He took a step nearer. "I come nothing for this Bill Lacy—nothing." He snapped his fingers derisively. "Why should I? But, instead, I would be your friend. The senorita is an American, and to her one of my race may not appeal, yet I would prove my devotion with my life."

"Your devotion, senor?"

"Is not the word expressive? I am of a Southern race, senorita, and we do not calculate—we feel. Why, then, should I conceal my eagerness? It is love which causes me to thus defy all and offer you freedom."

"Love!" she laughed. "Why, that is impossible. Surely you only jest, senor."

The smile deserted his lips, and with a quick, unexpected movement he grasped her hand.

"Jest! You would call it a jest. You will not think so for long. Why, what can you do? No; stop shrinking back from me. It will be well that you listen. I come to you with a chance to escape; I will take the risk and pledge you my aid. I alone can save you; there is no other to whom you can turn. In return I but ask my reward."

She hesitated, her eyes lifting to his face.

"You promise me your assistance?"

"Within the hour."

"How? What plan have you?"

"That I will not tell; you must trust me. I am the lieutenant of Pascual Mendes." a touch of pride in his voice. "And my word alone will open the way. You will come?"

"Wait; I must know more. You say it is love which prompts your offer, senor. I cannot understand; and even if this is true, I must be frank and honest in my answer—I do not return your love."

"Bah! That is nothing. I know women; they learn love quickly when the way opens. I am not so ill to look at, senorita. A kiss now will seal the bargain! I will wait the rest."

"You ask no pledge, then, of me?"

"Only your consent to accompany me, and the kiss. Beyond that I take the gambler's chance. Only you must say yes or no; for it will require time for me to clear the road."

"Within the hour, then, senor?"

"The sooner the better; they tell me Lacy will be here himself soon, and after he comes the one chance is over with. You will give the kiss?"

"Do not ask it, senor!"

"Oh, but I will—aye, more, I'll take it. A dozen will do no harm, and no scream from those lips will be heard. You may as well be nice, my beauty."

She was against the wall, helpless, and the grip of his hands was like steel. His breath was on her cheek; his eyes burning with lust gazing straight into her own. Slowly, remorselessly, he bent her head backward until she feared her neck would snap. Into her terror-stricken mind leaped the sudden conclusion that resistance with this beast was futile; she must outwit him with his brains. Suddenly relaxing herself, she slipped to the earthen floor on her knees.

"Please, please," she begged, "I give in, senor, I give in."

But as she spoke her right hand closed about a square jagged bit of rock.

"So, my pretty," sneered Cateras, "you have learned that Juan Cateras is not a man to trifle with. It is well." And, releasing his grip upon her, he allowed the girl to rise.

As she stood there in the half light, her gray eyes flashing, her young bosom rising and falling, she was a vaguely defined but alluring figure. So Juan Cateras thought, and he took a step nearer, his thick, red lips curling with lust, eager to claim their rich reward. As they came closer Stella Donovan stiffened.

"Look, senor," she whispered—"behind you!"

The Mexican in his eagerness was off his guard. He turned to look, and at that instant the girl drew back her sturdy arm and then brought it forward again with all her vigor. Clak! She heard the rock sound against her oppressor's head, heard a low moan escape his lips, and saw him sink slowly to the floor at her feet.

The next instant she was beside him, in terror lest she had killed him; but a hurried glance, supplemented by her fingers which reached for his pulse, assured her that she had only stunned her assailant. With deft hands that worked speedily in the darkness she unstrapped from around his waist the belt with its thirty-six cartridges and revolver, then pulled from his pocket the keys, not only to her cell, but, she judged, to others.

The feeling of their bronze coldness in her hot hands brought a quick message to her brain; beyond a question of doubt the missing Cavendish was concealed in one of the dark, dank cells in the immediate vicinage, if not actually in this same passage, then in another one perhaps not greatly distant.

Reaching beneath her outer skirt, she jerked loose her white petticoat, and then began tearing it into long strips which she knotted together. This done, she bound Juan Cateras hand and foot, and, with some difficulty, turned him over on his face after first thrusting into his half-open

Children Cry for Fletcher's CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. Canadian Cement Wanted.

The crown agents for the colonies have invited Canadian manufacturers to submit quotations immediately for a large supply of Canadian cement. It is understood that the material is for use on the Gold Coast, where Gen. "Jack" Stewart is building a big harbor.

Canadian firms had expected that, as the work was being done by a company headed and controlled by Canadians, the bulk of supplies would be purchased in Canada. These expectations have in the main been disappointed, as the crown agents, and not the contractors, have the authority to place the orders.

The inquiry for Canadian cement indicates, however, that Canada's friends at court in the Gold Coast, including its Canadian-born governor, Gen. Guggisberg, are making their influence felt.

How Flour, Feed and Grain sales are increased

by Long Distance

Some quotations from recent reports:

"I use Long Distance entirely in my business (Hay and Grain). Sales are made quicker and with less expense than by wire-telling. Since yesterday I sold 2 cars of grain."

"I sold 10,000 jute sacks on which my commission was $100.00 at an expense of $2.50 for L.D. calls."

"I sold 3 customers in between $10,000 and $51,000 at a cost of 45 cents for Long Distance—a little over the price of two cigars."

"We regularly make Long Distance sales to customers from carload lots before placing orders for same."

"We accept reverse Long Distance calls on orders from customers."

We can tell you how to apply Long Distance to almost any business

CANADIAN MICA.

Greater Demand Than Ever For This Mineral.

The demand for mica is greater than ever, the United States Bureau of Mines reports. This odd natural substance is now one of the greatest boons in the electrical industry as a perfect insulator. So important is mica in electrical work, it is declared that many of the larger electrical supply manufacturing companies own and operate their own mica mines.

Mica, says the bureau, includes a group of several minerals characterized by a perfect basal cleavage by virtue of which they may be split into exceedingly thin plates.

Of the several varieties of the mineral only two are of commercial value, the "muscovite," or white mica, and the "phlogopite," or amber. India, Canada and the United States are the chief producers.

Mica possesses a combination of special qualities which is found in no other mineral, consequently no satisfactory substitute has been found. Chief among these qualities are elasticity, toughness, flexibility, transparency, ability to withstand excessive heat and sudden changes of temperature, high dielectric strength, cleavability and resistance to decomposition.

An important use of electrical mica is for inter-leaving between the copper segments of commutators. Thin films are used in vast numbers in condensers for magnetos and in wireless apparatus. As sheets in greatly diversified shapes, as washers and tubes, mica is used extensively as an insulator in dynamos and in various appliances, in fuse boxes, sockets, switches, electric heaters, flatirons, telephones, etc.

As a heat-resisting transparent medium, sheet mica is often used in furnace sight holes, for heat screens, lamp chimneys, canopies and shades, particularly for gas mantles, also for military lanterns and searchlights.

Its ability to withstand strains and shocks, combined with its transparency, has led to wide use in motor goggles, spectacles, driver helmets, smoke helmets, compass cards, gauge fronts and in windows subject to shock, such as on the conning towers of battleships.

Owing to the resonance of mica, circular sheets of high-grade muscovite are used extensively in phonographs as sound-reproducing devices. Such sheets are also used in other sound-detecting devices as the submarine detectors.

The brilliancy of its reflecting surfaces gives the mineral a wide use as a decoration, notably as Christmas tree "snow." Coarse ground mica is also used for ornamentation of pottery, lamps, curtains, cloth and in India in decorating the temples.

An unusual use for the ground product, which, says the Bureau of Mines, "fortunately has not extended outside India," is in medicinal preparations and wound dressings."

The recent development of wide uses for the ground product has opened a wide field for utilization of waste and scraps, and saved the industry much waste. The more impure and coarse types are used as a coating to prevent tar roofing from sticking when rolled; purer and finer grades are used in paints, ornamental tiles and concrete. A mixture of ground mica and powdered aluminum is said to make a rust-preventing paint of good quality.

On account of its heat-resisting quality, it is used extensively in railroad car axle packing, in pipe and boiler coverings, in fireproof paints and even in rubber tires. Ground mica is also used in annealing steel, as an absorbent for nitroglycerine in the manufacture of certain explosives, as a component in roofing, as a filler in rubber and other products, in calico printing and as the fire powder.

The purest and finer powder is used for wallpaper decorations, as a lubricant for wood bearings, and mixed with oil as a lubricant for metal bearings. It has been found that mica may also be used successfully as a flux in ceramic wares.

Hitting at the Japs.

Some sweeping recommendations are understood to be included in the introductory report of the commission on British Columbia fisheries submitted by William Duff, M.P., chairman of the commission, to Hon. Jacques Bureau, acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, recently. Contents of the report have not been made public, but two of its main recommendations are said to be:

1. Curtailment of the issue of fishing licenses to Japanese.

2. Reorganization of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

In the latter connection the suggestion has been made that a Minister of Fisheries should be created, distinct from the Department of Marine. The report is understood to take up this point and to urge reorganization of the department with a view to greater attention being given to fisheries and to the pursuance of a more consistent policy.

Underground Chorus of 1200 Voices Possible Over 2,400 Wire Cable

"Unwept, unhonored and unsung" might be an apt title for the picture above, which records an imaginary "pulling in" of the 1,200 pair cable on a Toronto downtown street the other day.

Unobserved, except for the messenger boy in the background, this giant telephone cable disappeared underground.

It is a far cry from the fence wire used by Dr. Bell in his early experiments at Brantford to the 2,400 wire cable, of which a cross section is shown at the right.

Sixty-foot poles with twenty cross-arms, each carrying ten wires, did not improve the appearance of city streets.

There were also electrical difficulties and dangers arising from other high tension wires nearby.

Out of these difficulties telephone cables evolved. The evolution of telephone cable is a story of difficulties sought and overcome, rather than difficulties met and grappled with.

The first cable contained 25 pairs, or 50 wires, and as late as 1917 a 600 pair was considered to be the last word. Yet in five short years telephone engineers have doubled the limit.

To successfully operate with 2,400 wires in a cable less than 3 inches in diameter, each wire absolutely insulated from 2,399 others, and the whole air-tight and protected by a heavy lead sheath, surely demands engineering skill of a very high order.

Twelve hundred voices passing at one time through the small space of 3 inches without confusion, is an interesting thought.

Early Nova Scotia.

A monograph on "Nova Scotia: The Royal Charter of 1621," by Col. Alexander Fraser, LL.D., has just been published as part of the Transactions of the Royal Canadian Institute.

Sir William Alexander, as Col. Fraser points out, took part in the great movement of the time — the plantation of overseas colonies. This was the era of the settlement of North Carolina and Virginia in the south and of New England in the north; in fact, the progressive nations of Western Europe were extremely busy spying out new territory. The success of Sir William Alexander's enterprise was not as great at the time as might have been hoped, and the future of Nova Scotia for some years was clouded by the conflicting claims of the French. In fact, in 1631 King Charles requested Sir William, at the instance of the French Court, to remove all the people from Port Royal (now Annapolis Royal), which he did, giving it up to the French. This brought to an end Alexander's work of actual settlement of Nova Scotia.

"The possibilities of that enterprise were great," says Col. Fraser, "and Sir William Alexander showed uncommon vision, for his day, in evolving a scheme which, under capable business or commercial control, might have brought to Nova Scotia prosperity equal to that enjoyed in New England. Instead, we have, in his case, an example of a poet, a philosopher, an accomplished officer with dreams of empire revolving in his mind, going beyond his depth in the sea of practical business life. Yet he was a great pioneer with a prophetic faith; a promoter with the promoter's unfailing enthusiasm; a gentleman adventurer with the unbending courage of his ancient race; and a choice spirit which hope deferred was unable to break."

One of the Perils Faced by Canadian Shipping.

The icebergs, which may be a hundred years old before they reach the various trade routes, are the offsprings of great Polar glaciers which have been formed by accumulated snows.

The glaciers of Norway and Switzerland cannot be the parents of icebergs, because they begin to melt long before they reach the sea. The ice river becomes a water river when it reaches the ocean.

In Greenland, Spitzbergen, Nova Zembla, and other Arctic lands, the snowline and the sea-level are the same, and so the mighty glaciers not only reach the seashore, but in many cases push out to sea. The great mass of ice, forced into the water, and held up by the buoyancy of the waves, becomes detached from the parent stream, and drifts off on its lonely venture.

Many icebergs are comparatively small, but some reach a height of 200 feet.

The part that can be seen represents only one-eighth of its bulk, the remaining seven-eighths being under water.

The deaths of hundreds of people when, on April 14, 1912, the Titanic crashed into an iceberg was the starting of the International Ice Patrol. It was decided that each year, during May and June, an ice patrol should be maintained to locate icebergs and warn ships.

The bergs infest an area ranging from longitude 45 to 55, and north from latitude 41 degrees. Generally this area of 2,000 square miles is enveloped in fog. Through the fog the patrolling ships must steam continuously, exercising for bergs and icefields. They are constantly in danger of striking the former before they are sighted.

Observations are put down on maps, which are sent to the coastguard service officials at Washington. This information is then sent to Governments and shipping centres in all parts of the world.

In the late spring and early summer the bergs become very unstable, and huge masses of ice fall from them. Sometimes entire bergs roll over and over. Patrol vessels have tried firing their 12-pounder guns at them, but usually the shots are as ineffective as they would be against the Rock of Gibraltar.

It is impossible to judge the stability of an iceberg by its appearance. The towering cliff of apparently solid ice may be as delicately balanced and as sensitive as the spring of a watch. The whistle of a passing steamer may break off blocks large enough to sink a boat.

There have been cases in which Newfoundland fishermen, who wanted ice with which to pack their fish, have been sent to the bottom through a berg turning turtle when the small boat hit its side.

Such a scene was witnessed by a trawler which had sent out a boat to load ice. The instructions to the men were to cut chunks off the berg and return quickly to the ship; but, to the horror of the remainder of the crew, the huge mass of ice heeled over and buried the boat and its occupants in a whirlpool.

The annals of the sea abound with stories of fights with ice, and many crews have owed their lives to their agility in leaping from their sinking ships on to the bergs which hit them.

ALASKA.

Some Facts About Canada's Arctic Neighbor.

A picturesque and profitable industry which is being developed in Alaska is the farming of blue foxes. A number of islands have been leased for this purpose to private concerns, the animals being allowed to run wild, but supplied with food in winter time. The stock required is obtained from the Pribyiof Islands, where blue foxes have been numerous for many years.

The so-called blue fox is in color a dark blue gray. It is a variant, or "sport," of the common white Arctic fox. For some reason unknown most of the foxes on the Pribyiofs are blue, and, to keep the strain as pure as possible, all white ones are destroyed.

The foxes on the Pribyiofs make their dens in holes among the rocks. Males weigh as much as fourteen pounds. They are fed in winter on fish meal, which is preserved by salting. About 1,000 are trapped annually, the skins fetching $100 apiece at auction.

Native to the Arctic Circle in Alaska is a curious breed of dwarf cattle, known as the musk ox. It has an undercoat of hair as fine and soft as swan's down. It is woven into ceremonial garments for the Eskimo chiefs and mystery men. The natives regard the animal as sacred. A half-tamed project has in view the domestication of the species, which, if herds were developed, might become a valuable source of food supply.

The wealth near the Arctic in timber is enormous and virtually untouched. It shall not be recklessly wasted or misused, but shall be conserved as an undiminished resource for future generations. This is an affair which has been taken in hand by the scientific direction of the Forest Service, and one measure already adopted has been the setting aside of vast tracts as reserves—not to be whipped from public use, but to be managed with a view to intelligent utilization and conservation. These reserves are estimated to contain 77,000,000,000 board-feet available for lumber and pulp.

Alaska to-day has a white population of about 36,000, to which must be added 25,000 native Eskimos and Indians. What it needs most for its development is railroads. At Seward, the southern terminus of the new Government-owned railroad, a harbor has been dredged and a coaling station established for the navy. One may now travel by rail all the way from Seward to Fairbanks, though the bridge that is to span the Tanana is not yet built. It will be a fine structure, costing $2,500,000. The building of the railroad has employed 5,000 men for several years, the winters being devoted to rock excavation for cuts and tunnels. Not counting the bridge, its total cost will be about $52,000,000. It will be finished in two years.

The Tanana is a tributary of the Yukon, which is one of the world's greatest rivers and the principal artery of the commerce of the interior of Alaska. It will easily be seen what important advantages may be expected to accrue from a rail connection between the Yukon Valley and the South Alaska coast. The Government, however, has already in mind an extension of the road to Cape Prince of Wales, on the American side of Bering Strait, and the route it is to follow has been provisionally surveyed and mapped.

From Fairbanks the railroad will turn slightly west of north, reaching the south bank of the Yukon (distance 127 miles) at a point called the Rapids, where the river narrows with high rocky bluffs on either side and a rocky islet in midstream which, exposed at low water, will afford a leaning place of support for a bridge. The Yukon, according to the provisional plans, will be crossed by a bridge with a span 1,250 feet long, at a height of 150 feet above the stream.

Thence the railroad will run westward along the north bank of the Yukon 225 miles to the Koyukuk river, which it will cross at a point not far from where it enters the Yukon. From there it will proceed due west to Council, which is the center of a gold-mining district. The distance from Council to Cape Prince of Wales is only 150 miles as the crow flies; but the route followed will be more devious, up the valley of the Niukluk, thence across to or divide to the Kruzgemapa river, along the banks of the latter stream to where it empties into an arm of Bering Sea (Imuruk Basin), to the seaport village of Port Clarence, and up the coast to the Cape.

Greater developments are coming.

By the will of the late Marshall Oliver, Deseronto, St. Mark's church, of that town, has been bequeathed the sum of $10,000. Other bequests are $5,000 to Wycliffe College, Toronto; $5,000 to Miss Ann Spellman, housekeeper, and several smaller sums to friends of the family. The real estate and other property is to be converted into cash and divided among the other beneficiaries. The total estate involved is well over $100,000. Marshall Oliver was the last member of one of the oldest families in Deseronto.

A very pleasant little gathering took place at Mrs. Freshman's last Thursday evening, when she read her paper on "Mission in Syria and the East." Mrs. (Rev.) Foster attended to the musicales to the delight of all present. Uncle Dr. and Mrs. Freshman's first trip to the Orient they visited the Missions in Palestine, Europe, Asia and Africa, of which this paper was a reminiscence. Having visited Bermuda (crossing the Gulf Stream diagonally, 240 miles), crossing the Atlantic three miles, from New York to Liverpool and the Norway Cruise to the North Cape and Spitzbergen," the land of the Midnight Sun, on the Arctic Ocean within 640 miles of the North Pole, Mrs. Freshman can understand the heaving of the mighty ocean, as also, the sweet calmness of the sea.

McGinnis & O'Connor, road contractors, have completed a little over three miles of provincial highway west of the village of Odessan. When the contract was let it was expected that the company would be able to get its plant on the job and do about half a mile of road before the bad weather set in. The weather has been so favorable that the contractors have pushed the work along very rapidly and they have done more work than was anticipated. Until such time as winter weather commences, the workmen will continue the road work. When the contract is completed, it will mean that there will be a beautiful piece of provincial highway from Napanee to Kingston. The Gananoque road will be completed this month, which will mean that there will be a clear stretch from Napanee to Gananoque. It is not the intention of the contractors to finish the top dressing on the Odessa roadway, as warm weather is required to bake the top surface.
